The IAB SA has launched a new Transformation Council with the sole aim of bringing about sustainable change and education in the digital publisher, media and marketing industry. This council will work in close collaboration with the IAB Board and other councils, in particular, the education council.

Bronwen Auret, Head of The IAB SA Transformation Council and Head of Digital Operations at Metropolitan Republic says, “SA has a deficit of skilled digital employees. As a matter of urgency, we need to nurture and develop the growing talent pool that we do have. Ultimately, our job is to make this industry as sexy and appealing as possible.”

This intention has assumed the form of the dedicated Council for the promotion of transformation of the digital media and marketing industry as a whole. Josephine Buys, CEO of IAB SA says, “When I joined the IAB in 2014, there were seven active councils, each of which addressed a pressing need in Digital. An obvious gap in this line up was that of diversity and transformation. I am thrilled to have pioneered the launch of this Council after many years of personally committing to providing hope and opportunity to all South Africans, especially our youth. I’m also delighted that Bronwen Auret accepted the challenge of heading up this critical council at such an important time for our industry. The level of leadership that has already participated and committed support to the invaluable work of this Council is already testament to its value. While we have a long road ahead of us to fill the talent gap in digital, I am confident that this is the start of a meaningful and active initiative for IAB SA.”

The Transformation Council’s key objectives will be rolled out over the course of three years. The council will start with the basics, such as reviewing and approving policy and devising the strategy, guidelines and scorecards for transformation for IAB members, including other IAB SA councils. This documentation will take into account substantive national and international regulatory developments as well as best practice in the field transformation management.

One exciting part of the council’s responsibilities will be the creation of learning platforms in conjunction with the IAB SA Education Council, aimed at driving transformation through education and access to knowledge.

Transformation doesn’t occur in a vacuum, it requires the participation and support of the whole industry. For this reason, the council will be launching a number of initiatives during the course of the year, which will thrive with the cooperation and support of willing companies.

Bronwen adds, “As we kick off transformation within the IAB, the first thing I would like to ask industry members is to be mindful of their personal impact on transformation. So I’d like to set a challenge for industry leaders: mentor someone this year and actively think about interns/young employees and how to grow their careers.”

The IAB invites all industry members to share their transformation success stories/case studies with Bronwen, which they would love to share on the IABSA website.

Bronwen concludes, “We are looking to make big strides in the area of transformation. I welcome any recommendations, suggestions or proposed partnerships.”
