Adam Howard has just returned to South Africa from Rome and Greece as Musical Director for William Kentridge's world tour of "Refuse the Hour." This is the third leg of a tour which debuted at the Amsterdam Festival in June, went on to the Avignon Theatre Festival in July, and now just back from Rome and Athens. The piece will continue to entrance audiences across the globe over the next few years.

As Musical Director, Adam arranged and orchestrated the music of Phillip Miller who composed a 'dadaistic pandemonium of sounds' to accompany William's combination of performance, theatre, opera, dance, visual installations and video projections.

As well as performing on the trumpet, Adam also conducts the piece, which explores Kentridge's journey to the limits of science, ontology and cosmology. The show played to full houses at the Teatro Argentina in Rome and in Athens at the Onassis Cultural Centre.

All this global exposure hasn't caught Adam napping. Take a listen to Howard Music's latest TV ads, including:
