

10 global new agencies involved in global spotlight on crime in migration

A group of news agencies will be conducting a global spotlight on criminal networks that affect refugees in regions like the Middle East, the Southern Sahara, Europe and the Mediterranean, South and North America, as well as parts of South East Asia. The investigation has launched as part of Minds International and AFP is one of the participating new agencies and its production will be available in English, French, and Spanish.

The series will explore issues like the root causes of migrant smuggling, travel patterns, and the social impact in the world's smuggling hotspots.
