Issued by Acceleration

17 May 2012

South African digital marketers and publishing executives are invited to participate in Acceleration's inaugural Digital Ignition Symposium taking place in June of this year. The event, to be held at Le Franschhoek in the Cape Winelands, features presentations by some of the world's leading digital thinkers, with participation confirmed from local and international speakers, including Google and Adobe among others.

The two day event brings together a range of quality speakers and delegates, both local and international, to explore new ideas and build lasting relationships with people that count. This event will provide a platform for open thinking, unconstrained discussion, valuable networking and absolutely no sales pitches.

Says Richard Mullins, director at Acceleration: "Marketers and publishers have to redefine their worlds and accelerate their digital initiatives, as their consumers become more digitally engaged. This event will provide them with inspiring ideas that will help them to drive the marketing, publishing, mobile and social strategies to succeed in the digital space."
