

Research on CCTV to be released this week

At the IFSEC South Africa SECUREX 2010, being held at Sandton from 31 August - 2 September 2010, the business research and consulting firm, Frost & Sullivan, will present a free seminar session announcing the results of a comprehensive research campaign it has undertaken into the South African CCTV market.

The seminar, being held at 4.30pm on Wednesday 1 September, will:

- Analyse the South African CCTV market and identify industry challenges as well as market drivers and restraints.
- Determine the current revenue size and growth rate for each of the sectors within the South African CCTV market.
- Analyse the current competitive structure as well as key participants and organisations active in each of the sectors.
- Identify, analyse and discuss the key market growth opportunities.

Grant Mills, MD of UBM Montgomery, said, "IFSEC aims to be at the forefront of the international security industry. With the help of Frost & Sullivan, who are well known throughout the world as providers of comprehensive business research, we are delighted that our visitors and exhibitors will have the chance to benefit from hearing the results of their extensive research conducted into the South African CCTV market."

The inaugural show in 2009 proved to a success with 200 companies exhibiting to 5500 security professionals from 48 countries, cementing the show's place as the security, safety, fire and protection and safety & health event for the African market.
