“The Black Management Forum (BMF) and the Afropolitan are a perfect match,” says Afropolitan publisher Sean Press, commenting on the magazine becoming an official media partner to the BMF. “The magazine speaks directly to this market through thought-provoking business, lifestyle and cultural content.”

Readers can now also look forward to the addition of a dedicated BMF column that delves into industry insights, topical discussions and debates regarding local business. Together with strategic partner Kaya FM these three brands will strive to unite and inspire like-minded people.

New website

Its growing success has also prompted the development of a brand new website that aims to offer readers a fresh custom-made experience of the content. Apart from the online magazine, the site now also features hot news updates, Afropolitan Ambassadors and an archive of past editions. It incorporates flash elements, an improved navigation bar, Afro-World listings and prominent links to Facebook and other social networks.
